SCOTT SIGGINS, SQUABITE

Ever Heerd of a Squabite Afore?—Well Whatever It Is. It's Near Like a Ruralite and Steve Breen, Beg Pardon, Scott Siggins Is One Occasionally.

Almost every actor—that is almost every real actor—has a hobby, in the riding of which he takes an interest sometimes little less than the all-absorbing interest and love of his dramatic art. Scott Siggins, the able character man of the Poli Stock Company who will assume one of the principal roles in "Leah Kleschna" the sensational drama to be produced at Poli's next week is not an exception to the hobby rule.

Mr. Siggins goes in for squab raising and small gardening when he isn't acting. This is about two months in the year when, doffing the grease paint and togs of stageland the actor hiss himself to his "farm" down Tarrytown way and in overalls and broadbrimmed hat gets back to nature with a vengeance. The actor's closest friends have applied to him the sobriquet of "Farmer Siggins" and the clever character man doesn't resent it. Some day when he wearles of the "profession" if he ever does then "Farmer Siggins" and the clever character man doesn't resent it. Some day when he wearles of the "profession" if he ever does then "Farmer Siggins" will quit the reaim of the calcium and be a sure enough agriculturist for the remainder of his days.

Nor is Mr. Siggins the only actor who has found the country about his Warner Bros., Mfg. Co., the Union Metallic Cartridge Company, The Locomobile Company of America, The Bridgeport Brass Company and Harvey Hubbell, Inc., are making extension to plant and equipment that in the aggregate will reach perhaps a million dollars of cost.

These figures do not take into consideration the work being done by many smaller concerns. The Automatic Machine Company for instance, has had plans drawn for a structure 108x120 feet for an addition to the plant of the Pacific Iron Works, which the Company has leased. It will be equipped as a machine shop, it will be built of brick and steel with a slag roof. The baseball writers around the circuit are having a little argument as to who is the best catcher doing duty in the circuit. The Hartford Courant writer says that Joe Connor and Eddie Bridges are rated as good backstops, but they have nothing on either Wadleigh or Abrogast, the two Senator backstops. This lingo may go all right, but when it comes to choosing the good ones don't overlook Kocher of the Orators. Kocher is only a kid with lots to learn, while the others have seen their best days. In fact Kocher is too fast for the Orator bunch.
